

On New Year's Eve 2014, Sarasota's Benjamin Gilkey was diagnosed with leukemia at 7 years old. His treatment would illustrate that even the most common of pediatric cancers can come with unique challenges.

Benjamin's case soon fell into the "very high risk" category. A rare genetic condition was discovered that revealed not only the cause of his leukemia, but the reality that other cancers were likely to follow. Benjamin suffered a relapse in 2016. The team at Johns Hopkins All Children's Hospital was relentless in their pursuit of new medicines and clinical trials. Despite their best efforts, in February 2017, Benjamin, 9, died, surrounded by his family and incredible nurses.

During Benjamin's long hospitalization, his parents watched the construction of the Johns Hopkins All Children's Research and Education Building from their seventh floor window. They dreamed about what would transpire within those walls that might cause other families to find hope where their hope ended. From those dreams, The Benjamin Gilkey Fund for Innovative Pediatric Cancer Research was born.

The first groundbreaking study funded by these efforts will begin enrolling patients this year. Please join the Evie's family in once again supporting this life-saving research for children in our community and beyond."
